The rate of animal abuse against horses is "relatively elevated compared with other types of animals", reports Andreas Ruttimann, who is a legal expert with the country's foundation for animal law.

The 20 Minuten newspapers reported that experts believe that as many as 10,000 people living in Switzerland are suspected of practicing zoophilia (sex with animals).

Animal welfare officials in Switzerland have warned that there are 10,000 people with what they term "an unnatural s*xual interest in horses" in the countryside.

The organization drew particular attention to the maltreatment of horses, with almost ten percent of the cases (with horses) involving zoophiles.

Animal rights activists in Switzerland say there are up to 10,000 people with sexual feelings towards the animals. Figures showed cases of animal abuse rose to 1,709 in 2014, an increase of 1,542 from the previous 12 months.

Switzerland has a horse population of about 110,000 spread across 18,000 Swiss farms.

The average fine for these abuses was 300 francs.

He admitted that the high level of cases involving horses might relate to the level or risk involved.

The group said the number of bestiality - cross-species sexual activity between human and animals - cases is likely to be high as so many people in the country live near farms or are involved with horse-riding activities. Switzerland is not the only country that has seen this crime. The favorite animal that Swiss perverts love to have sex with is the horse, according to a new report. The incident resulted in his breaking his leg while attempting to have sex with a horse.
